The Salem German Evangelical and Reformed Church is a distinctive architectural and historical site located on the eastern edge of East New Market along Railroad Avenue. Built in that part of the town that was divided into building lots during the last decades of the nineteenth century, the Gothic Revival frame church was shared by the members of the German Evangelical and Reformed congregations living in Dorchester County. The worship services, usually held in German, continued until around 1922 when part of the membership consolidated with the Cambridge church. Since the last worship service was held in the building around 1932, the structure has been used for storage.

The exterior Gothic Revival design of the church is highlighted by a three-story pyramidal roofed bell tower that dominates the south, center bay. Pointed arch colored glass windows mark the sides of the weatherboarded frame structure. Perhaps most noteworthy, however, is the interior with its pressed metal walls and beaded board wainscoting. The raised, circular altar with a domed ceiling is covered with pressed metal as well.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Salem German Evangelical and Reformed Church stands on the north side of Railroad Avenue (MD Route 14) on the eastern edge of East New Market, Dorchester County, Maryland. The single-story frame church faces south with the gable oriented on a north/south axis.

Built ^{in 1899} ~~around 1880-1890~~, the frame church is supported by a brick pier foundation and sheathed with plain weatherboard siding. The steeply pitched roof with extended eaves is covered with asphalt shingles.

The south (main) facade is dominated by a three-story entrance and bell tower. A double-door Victorian entrance is topped by a triangular, multi-pane colored glass transom. To each side are pointed arch colored glass windows. The middle level of the tower is marked by a single pointed arch opening. The belfry has pairs of louvered openings on each side. the pyramidal tower roof, still covered by a layer of wood shingles, is topped by the fragments of a Celtic cross.

The east and west sides of the church are simply finished with three pointed arch, colored glass windows. A brick stove stack rises through the east side. The north (back) side of the church is treated in a straightforward manner with a weatherboard wall.

Inside the vestibule the walls are finished with beaded board wainscoting, and double two-panel doors open into the sanctuary. The walls and ceiling of the sanctuary are covered by pressed metal sheathing above the beaded board wainscoting. A fleur-de-lis pattern embellishes the walls, while the ceiling is executed in a square pattern with raised borders. The almost circular altar with a raised floor and domed ceiling is also covered with pressed metal. The church furniture has been removed from the building since the structure has been used for storage. To each side of the altar are small rooms. On the opposite (south) wall a four-panel door fixed in the upper portion of the wall provides access to the bell tower.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support. The Salem German Evangelical and Reformed Church is a distinctive architectural and historical site for the east end of East New Market. Built during the last decades of the nineteenth century, the church stands on land that was divided into small lots on the edge of town in anticipation for additional development. The church was erected by the German Evangelical and Reformed congregations as a shared church in which to worship. Both denominations held worship services, many spoken in German, until around 1922 when the congregations were consolidated with the Cambridge church. The structure continued to be used as a church until 1932 by a Lutheran congregation. Since that time the building has been used largely for storage.

Architecturally, the Salem Church is a distinctive frame building executed in Gothic Revival taste. The three-story entrance and bell tower is decorative with straightforward Victorian sawnwork. Perhaps most notable is the pressed metal church interior and the circular altar.
